

Copyright

Regular copyright requires the granting of permission for reuse once the author/creator is contacted.

In contrast, Creative Commons (CC) licenses provide the permissions through the license selected by the creator – so no need to spend time requesting copyright permission.

CC licenses encourage reuse, revisions, and remixing.

CC licenses may have limits because there are degrees of openness, depending on the license selected.

Creative Commons has become the most popular open licensing system in education.

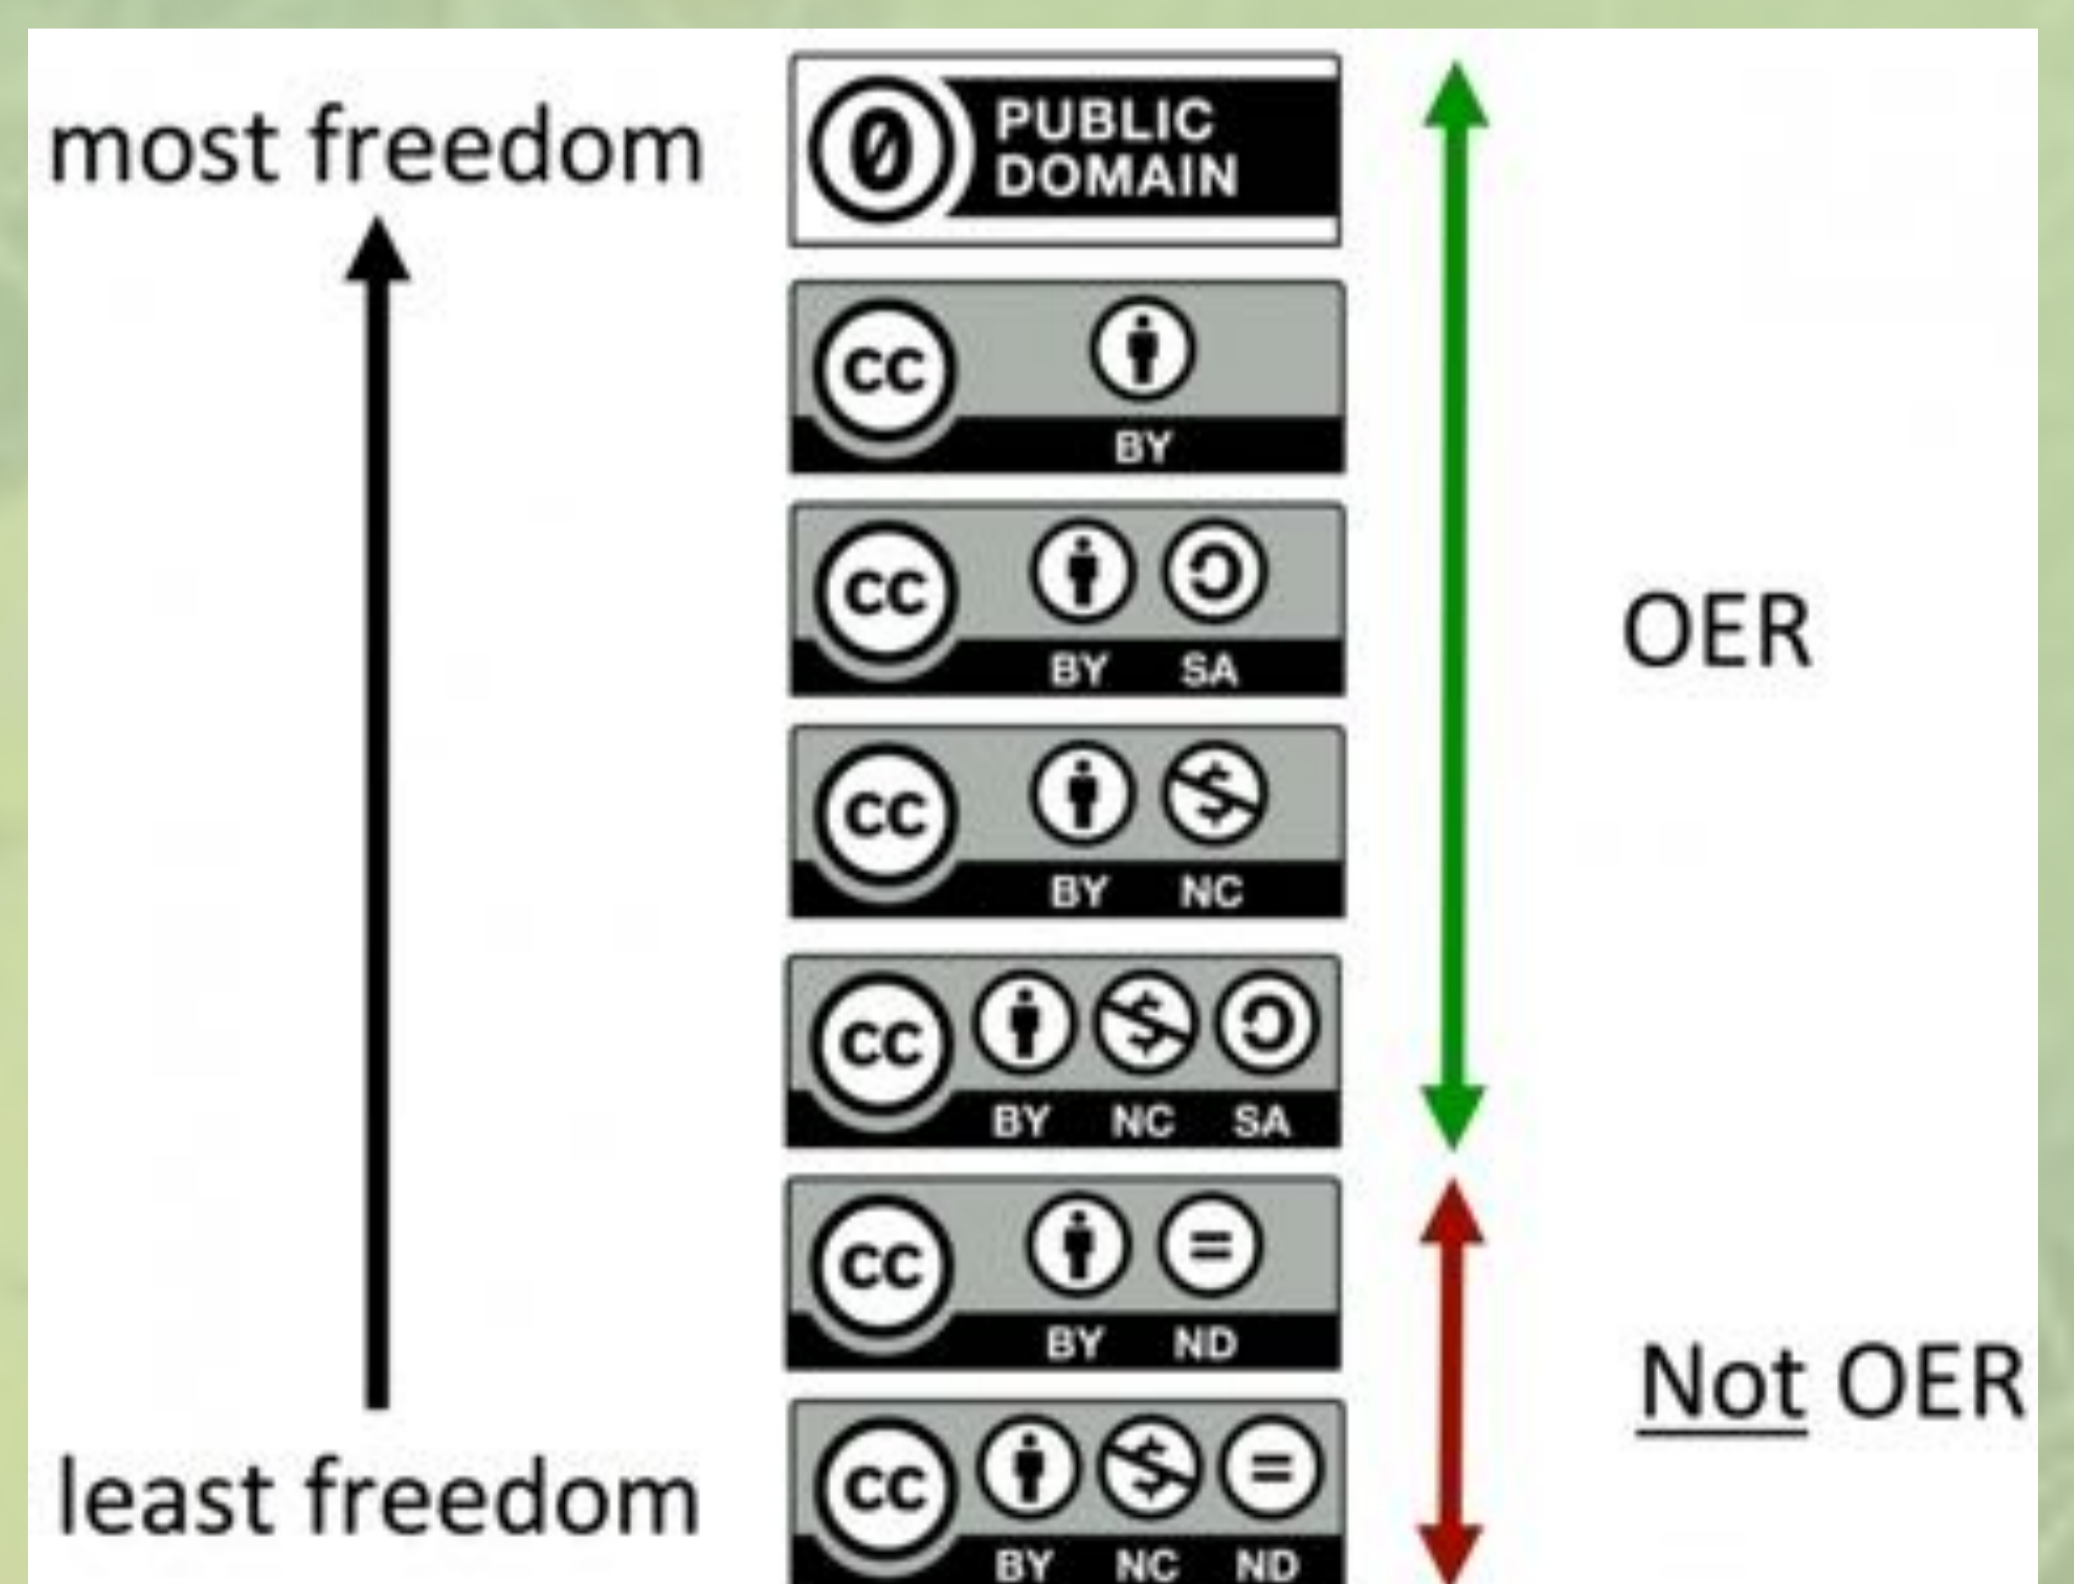

Types of CC Licenses:

- Attribution (BY) – requires that others who use your work must attribute it to you, reference the work, give you credit for it in the way you request, must request your permission to use your work without attributing it
- Non-Commercial (NC) – others can copy, distribute, display, perform, modify, and use your work for any purpose other than commercially
- No Derivatives (ND) – others can copy, distribute, display, and perform only original copies of your work
- Share Alike (SA) – others can copy, distribute, display, perform, and modify your work, as long as they distribute any modified work on the same terms

These CC Licenses can be combined in different ways.

Here are the six most popular combinations:

- Attribution Only: CC-BY
- Attribution + Share Alike: CC-BY-SA
- Attribution + No Derivatives: CC-BY-ND
- Attribution + Non-Commercial: CC-BY-NC
- Attribution + Non-Commercial + Share-Alike: CC-BY-NC-SA
- Attribution + Non-Commercial + No Derivatives: CC-BY-NC-ND

The Annora Brown Art, Life, and Legacy Education Project acknowledges that we are gathered on the lands of the Niitsitapi (Blackfoot) people of the Canadian Plains and we pay respect to the Niitsitapi people past, present and future while recognizing their cultural heritage, beliefs and relationship to the land. This area is also home to the Metis Nation of Alberta, Region III.

The Annora Brown Art, Life, and Legacy Education Project is supported in part by funding from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council.
